Beyond Borders, Beyond Time

Hanny Al Khoury's Vision of Immortal Art

1. Your journey has been extraordinary. At 18, you left your home with almost nothing, lived in Jerusalem, and today your work is owned by some of the most powerful people in the world. What drove you to keep going?

I had no choice but to keep going. Art wasn't just a passion it was my voice, my survival, and my way of carving a place in the world. There were moments of doubt, but I knew that my story needed to be told. The struggles I faced only fueled my determination. I believed that if I could channel my experiences into my work, I could create something timeless—something that would outlive me and speak to generations beyond borders.

2. Identity is a recurring theme in your work. How does your Palestinian Christian heritage shape your art?

My heritage is woven into every piece I create. It's my foundation, my source of strength, and the lens through which I see the world. Being Palestinian and Christian has given me a unique perspective—one that blends deep historical roots with a sense of resilience and hope. My work is about preserving stories, celebrating culture, and finding beauty in endurance. It's not just personal; it's universal.

3. You've said before that 'revenge' is a theme in your work, but not in the way people expect. What do you mean by that?

New beginning, 2022, oil on canvas, 752 x 1016 cm

Revenge, 2022, oil on canvas, 166 x 190 cm

For me, revenge is not about destruction—it's about creation. It's about proving that no matter how much hardship I faced, I could transform it into something extraordinary. My success, my art, and my ability to touch people worldwide—that is the ultimate response to adversity. Art allows me to turn pain into something meaningful, something that inspires rather than divides.

Nothingness, 2018, oil on canvas, 168 x 252 cm

4. Your work has been showcased at Banksy's Walled Off Hotel in Bethlehem. What was that experience like?

It was an unforgettable experience. The Walled Off Hotel is more than just a gallery; it's a space that forces people to confront reality through art. Being part of it allowed me to connect with a global audience in a deeply emotional way. Seeing people engage with my work, asking questions, and feeling something beyond the canvas that's what makes art powerful.

5. Your work is collected by prominent figures worldwide and was hosted by Banksy in his Walled Off Hotel in a solo exhibition as well as another solo exhibition at the contemporary art museum of Alberta. How does having such a prestigious and diverse audience influence the way you create?

It's an incredible honor, but it doesn't change how I create. I stay true to my vision, my story, and my journey. However, knowing that my work reaches people across cultures and backgrounds reaffirms the universal power of art. It reminds me that creativity transcends language, politics, and geography. Whether it's a collector, a museum, or someone seeing my work for the first time, my goal is always to leave a lasting impact.

6. You moved to Canada in 2016. Has your artistic style evolved since leaving the Middle East?

Absolutely. Moving to Canada exposed me to new artistic movements, diverse perspectives, and an environment that encouraged experimentation. While the heart of my work remains rooted in my heritage, my style has expanded. I've incorporated new techniques, played with abstraction, and embraced a more global artistic language. Distance has given me clarity, allowing me to see my culture and experiences in a new light.

7. If your art could leave just one lasting message, what would it be?

That perseverance and creativity can overcome anything. No matter where you come from or what you go through, your story matters. Art is proof that we exist, that we feel, and that we contribute something meaningful to the world. I want my work to inspire people to dream beyond their circumstances and believe in the power of expression.

8. You mentioned that your next destination will be Dubai, where you plan to open a studio. What inspired your decision

Playground, 2020, oil on canvas, 123 x 152 cm

Compilation, 2022, oil on canvas, 166 x 190 cm

to move there, and how do you see this new chapter unfolding, especially with the support of influential political and economic leaders in the country?

Dubai is more than just a city; it's a force of energy, a global stage where art, culture, and ambition collide. The moment I set foot here, I knew this was where the next chapter of my journey had to unfold. This place breathes creativity, and the opportunities to push boundaries, to redefine what's possible, are endless. I'm beyond excited to build my studio in the heart of this vibrant, ever-evolving landscape. It's not just about showcasing my work; it's about creating something bigger, something that transcends art itself. With the incredible support I've received from visionary leaders and cultural pioneers, I see this as a chance to reach new heights, to craft spaces that inspire, and to bring art to life in ways the world has never seen before. Dubai is where history is written in real-time, and I'm ready to be a part of it.

9. You have been invited to showcase your work in Almaty and Vienna, where you will have the opportunity to present your art to an exclusive audience of distinguished collectors from both countries. With the strong support of influential figures who appreciate your work, how do you feel about this upcoming exhibition—particularly in Almaty, the economic hub of Central Asia?

It's an exciting and humbling opportunity. Almaty, with its rich history and growing art scene, presents a unique platform to connect with collectors and art enthusiasts who appreciate depth and storytelling in art. Vienna, with its legacy of artistic excellence, offers another incredible stage. What excites me most is the chance to bring my work to new audiences, to spark conversations, and to continue proving that art knows no boundaries.

Privacy. Beauty. Belonging.
That's what we deliver.
